Furthermore, in my opinion,
I'm not sure why the job qualifications mention international situations when we can encounter all of the situations mentioned without even going internationally.

We need engineering for desalination of water for Lake Tulare, the Salton Sea, and Laguna Saluda in our own country, unless California isn't part of our country. We need humanitarian efforts in New York City, and within our health systems, we need God's Grace for those affected by drugs and safety from terrible tragedies committed upon women and children.

We need peaceful protectors with the utmost reservation in our country and at our border who can defend themselves and others, unless we aren't providing we need those who can see a bigger picture that allows for worldwide peace.

All of this can currently be learned within our own borders with our current climate.
So why do the questions for these jobs intentionally disqualify candidates with practical experience based upon an international engineering license and prior experience in our government when we were already disqualifying hard-working and enduring candidates without just cause nor reason that we were already short up to a million people in the FBI?

Are the qualifications on the jobs potentially being adapted in a counterintuitive way?

Sincerely,
Jon F. D. Turpin, Pro Se, Pro Hac Vice

They changed the questions to make the hiring much more stringent.

I would say based upon the new questions I'm not qualified unless y'all want to give me my engineering license and admit I've been helping for over year without pay at expense.

Attached is the requested full list of medications and notes from the last physician appointment referencing neck and back pain, regarding my applications for National Guard, CIA, FBI, CISA, USAID, etc.
So far the majority of the jobs I've submitted my application to have been unexplainably reopened as backfill, closed, or outright canceled, I'm unsure what is going on in those hiring processes currently.

Sincerely,
Jon F. D. Turpin, Pro Se Pro Hac Vice

Recent:

Back pain and neck pain - He has scoliosis and mid back pain. Has a standing desk and ergonomic setup which manages. Takes Mobic as needed infrequently. He has done PT before and would consider it in the future but not currently.

ED noted on ROS. He has scarring on penis which caused pain with erection when he was younger, only rarely these days. He wonders whether pain history is contributory to ED.

Problem list:

1. Neck pain - He had a water sports injury around age 21. Has had some hand numbness in the past. See above.
 2. Herpes - dx 2018 - has had a few outbreaks, mild. He takes suppressive dose of Valtrex.
 3. ADHD - diagnosed age 5; tried Strattera but did not tolerate it well. He says that he was treated for a time in 14-15 with Adderall also.
 4. Autistic - not formally diagnosed, but he feels sure that he is mildly on the spectrum. He would like to have an assessment for this.
 5. Social: Complex history of family conflict which has involved patient leaving the state in order to prevent interference from parents, see notes 12/9/21, 12/10/21, Mychart message 12/2/22. He did get married and is not having intrusive current conflicts with his parents.
 6. Osteopenia - per DXA which was ordered out of suspicion for fractures and refractures of rib on mild provocation. Referred to endocrinology, saw them in 2020 and got workup. He takes calcium and vitamin D and was supposed to get f/u DXA. He wonders if poor diet and health were contributory at the time.
